Sir/Ma'am,

I have always believed that internships are a great way to apply the knowledge from the classroom to real-world experience. It not only boost our confidence but also help in developing the soft skills that are much needed at workplace and in leadership positions.

Unfortunately, I haven't really got an opportunity to intern with a company till now.

As far as academic projects are concerned, I am aware that project work enables students to think out of the box owing to the creative levels of imagination. Right from choosing a topic from an area of interest, project work involves finding creative solutions to various project-related problems and many technical challenges.

However, I don't have any real time project experience as such.

Having said that, I would like to mention that I'm really excited about this opportunity because I think it will give me the right exposure and develop my skills further.
